Interior Space Planning

Remodeling is a word that sends some people shivering and shaking their heads

Remodeling is a word that sends some people shivering and shaking their heads because they haven't taken the time to plan from the beginning like a new build.

Once you start changing one part of the structure, everything, and I do mean everything, changes, so you have to "plan that the plan goes with the plan after the plan is planned".

All good designs start at the entrance of the building (commercial or residential) even if you're re-doing a back room, bathroom or office. Stand at the entrance and plan. What do I see? Where does this lead to?

What given geometric patterns do I have to work with so all of this will pull together and minimize the changes to the rest of the house or office?

Construction Designs changes and keeps up with the latest developments in construction and design so that your space works for you and minimizes your frustrations and stretches your dollar.
